

Helen Jordan - Lecturer and consultant, Health Program Evaluation

Helen Jordan has extensive experience in health program evaluation practice and teaching. She has provided training, support and advice and developed reports in public health planning, practice and evaluation to local government, Divisions of General Practice, the Department of Human Services and the Commonwealth Department of Health and Ageing.

Helen is a lecturer and trainer of health program evaluation, teaching both accredited postgraduate and professional short courses, both face-to-face and by distance education, to public health policy makers in the Department of Health and Ageing through its Postgraduate Program and to a range of public health practitioners in the workforce.

Helen has interests in the evaluation of public health programs that include environmental health programs, workforce planning, public health planning, and indicator development. Her recent projects include providing evaluation and support to the 26 local government projects funded by the Good Practice Program to pilot the Environments for Health Framework for municipal public health planning; and the Southern Metropolitan Region workforce evaluation capacity-building project for local government.
