About your rights

This booklet provides information about being on a restricted involuntary treatment order or restricted community treatment order and your legal rights and entitlements under the Mental Health Act 1986. A member of the treating team will talk to you about this information and answer your questions.

The information must be explained in a language or way that you can understand. This booklet is also translated into a number of languages. You can ask a member of the treating team if it is available in your preferred language. Copies of this booklet in other languages are available online at www.health.vic.gov.au/mentalhealth

Copies of the Mental Health Act are available at the mental health service.

If at any time you have questions about this information or your rights, ask someone to explain. You can ask a member of the treating team, a friend, a family member, a lawyer, an advocate or a community visitor.

Charter of Human Rights and Responsibilities

The Victorian Charter of Human Rights and Responsibilities Act 2006 seeks to promote and protect certain human rights. The charter defines the protected rights and requires public mental health services to act compatibly with these rights.

The charter also specifies when and how rights can be limited by law. For example, under the Mental Health Act you may be detained in a mental health service if it is necessary to protect your health or safety or the safety of others. However, any restrictions on your liberty and any interference with your rights, privacy, dignity and self-respect must be kept to the minimum necessary in the circumstances.

If you have any questions about the charter or how it might affect your treatment, contact one of the organisations described at the end of this booklet.

Restricted involuntary treatment orders are made by a court under the Sentencing Act 1991. If a person with a mental illness is found guilty of an offence (other than a serious offence), the court may make a restricted involuntary treatment order instead of giving the person a sentence. The person is then taken to a mental health service and must be given treatment for their mental illness.

Mental illness is defined in the Mental Health Act as a medical condition that is characterised by a significant disturbance of thought, mood, perception or memory.

A court has placed you on a restricted involuntary treatment order so you can receive treatment for a mental illness. The court made the order after a psychiatrist found that all of the following criteria for being placed on a restricted involuntary treatment order apply to you:

- you appear to be mentally ill; and
- your mental illness needs treatment which can be obtained through a restricted involuntary treatment order; and
- because of your mental illness, involuntary treatment is necessary for your health or safety (whether to prevent a deterioration in your physical or mental condition or otherwise) or for the protection of members of the public.

The court will set a term for your restricted involuntary treatment order, which must not exceed two years.

Once you are taken to a mental health service, a psychiatrist will either admit you to the service as an inpatient or make a restricted community treatment order. Where possible, you will be treated in the community. If you are admitted as an inpatient, you must stay in the mental health service. Read the section on inpatient treatment in this booklet for more information. If the psychiatrist makes a restricted community treatment order for you, read the section on restricted community treatment orders.

Treatment

Your psychiatrist will prepare a treatment plan that is designed to meet your specific needs. You can be involved in planning your treatment and your psychiatrist will consider your preferences and concerns. The psychiatrist will also take into account the wishes of any guardian, family member or primary carer who is involved in providing ongoing care to you (unless you object), any beneficial alternative treatments and any significant risks of the treatment.

If your psychiatrist believes a particular psychiatric treatment is necessary, that treatment can be given to you, even if you refuse. If this happens, your psychiatrist will explain why the treatment is necessary. Your psychiatrist or another member of the treating team will discuss your treatment plan with you and give you a copy.

Your psychiatrist and other members of the treating team will regularly discuss with you your diagnosis, medication, methods of treatment, alternative treatments and available services. They will review and update your treatment plan on a regular basis.

You may have a friend or advocate with you when you are discussing your treatment with your psychiatrist.

Family members and other caregivers can provide valuable support and care to you while you are receiving treatment for your illness. Generally, they will only be given information about your treatment and care if you agree. However, if a guardian, family member or your primary carer needs information to care for you, a member of the treating team can give them the information, even if you don't agree.

Second opinion

It is your right to get a second opinion about your psychiatric condition and treatment. Your case manager or psychiatrist can arrange this from within the mental health service, or they can help you choose your own psychiatrist. If you choose a private psychiatrist you may have to pay a fee. You can discuss the second opinion with your treating psychiatrist; however, your treating psychiatrist is responsible for making the final decision about the treatment you receive.

Access to information

It is your right under freedom of information laws to apply for access to documents about your personal information that the mental health service holds.

If you wish to access the information, you can ask a member of the treating team or the mental health service's freedom of information officer to help you make an application.

Organisations that may be able to help you with a freedom of information application are described at the end of this booklet.

This section of the booklet has information about your rights and entitlements while you are admitted to a mental health service on a restricted involuntary treatment order.

Leave of absence

You may be allowed to leave the mental health service for a short time (for example, a few hours, overnight or a weekend) to visit family or friends or for some other purpose. If you would like to have leave, you should talk to a member of the treating team. Your psychiatrist will make the final decision about a request for leave.

Seclusion and restraint

Seclusion is when a person is kept alone in a room where the doors and windows are locked from the outside. This only happens if it is necessary to protect the person or others from an immediate or imminent risk to their health or safety or to prevent the person from absconding. It is only used when other ways of ensuring safety have failed.

Mechanical restraint is the use of a device, such as a harness or straps, to restrict a person's freedom to move about. Restraint may be used to enable a person to be medically treated, to prevent the person from injuring themselves or others or to prevent the person from persistently destroying property.

Seclusion and restraint can be approved by your psychiatrist or, in an emergency, authorised by the senior nurse on duty. They can only be used for as long as the above reasons apply.

If you are put in a seclusion room or are restrained, staff must give you appropriate bedding, clothing, food and drink at the appropriate times. You can ask staff for food and drink when you want them. They must also provide you with adequate toilet arrangements, including the opportunity to wash.

A nurse must review your physical and mental condition at least every 15 minutes. A doctor must also examine you at least every four hours, unless your psychiatrist thinks less frequent examinations are appropriate. If you are being restrained you must be monitored continuously.

Letters and telephone calls

You can contact people by letter or telephone. Your mail will not be opened.

Transfer

You may be transferred to a different mental health service if your psychiatrist believes that you would benefit from the transfer or if it is necessary for your treatment. If you do not want to be transferred, you should talk to your psychiatrist or you can appeal to the Mental Health Review Board. If you are transferred before the appeal is heard, the board will decide whether you should be returned to the original service when it hears the appeal.

Restricted community treatment orders

If your psychiatrist or the Chief Psychiatrist believes that you can live in the community while you receive the treatment you need, you may be placed on a restricted community treatment order. To find out more about these orders, read the section in this booklet on restricted community treatment orders and ask a member of the treating team to explain them.

Discharge from the restricted involuntary treatment order

If the Chief Psychiatrist is satisfied that any of the criteria for a restricted involuntary treatment order no longer apply to you, you must be discharged from the order and you will be free to leave. However, if both you and your psychiatrist think that you would benefit from further treatment at the mental health service, you can ask to stay on a voluntary basis.

If at any time you want to be discharged from the restricted involuntary treatment order, you should talk to your psychiatrist or other members of the treating team, or you can appeal to the Mental Health Review Board. Whether or not you appeal, the board will initially review the order within eight weeks of you being placed on a restricted involuntary treatment order and then at least every 12 months if you continue on the order. Your psychiatrist will also regularly review you to see if you should be discharged.

This section of the booklet has information about your rights and entitlements if you are placed on a restricted community treatment order. Restricted community treatment orders (RCTOs) are orders under the Mental Health Act that enable people on restricted involuntary treatment orders to live in the community while they receive treatment for their mental illness.

If your psychiatrist or the Chief Psychiatrist believes you can obtain the treatment you need while you live in the community, you will be placed on a RCTO. You will still be on a restricted involuntary treatment order, even though you are living in the community on a RCTO.

Planning for a restricted community treatment order

Your psychiatrist or the Chief Psychiatrist will talk to you about the RCTO and the reasons for it. You can be involved in planning the order and your preferences will be taken into consideration. For example, you may have a particular doctor who you wish to supervise the order.

Your psychiatrist or the Chief Psychiatrist will tell you when the order has been made. If your psychiatrist makes the RCTO, the psychiatrist must also tell the Chief Psychiatrist.

Treatment plan

Your psychiatrist will prepare a new treatment plan. The treatment plan will include an assessment about your needs for continuing treatment and support in the community and the best way these can be met.

You can be involved in planning your treatment and the psychiatrist will consider your preferences and concerns. Your psychiatrist or another member of the treating team will discuss your treatment plan with you and give you a copy. The plan will include:

- an outline of your treatment
- the name of the psychiatrist who will monitor your treatment
- the name of the doctor who will supervise your treatment
- the name of your case manager
- the place and times at which you are to receive treatment
- how often the supervising doctor must report on your treatment to the monitoring psychiatrist
- anything else your psychiatrist thinks is appropriate.

Conditions of the restricted community treatment order

You will be given a copy of the RCTO. The order will last until it is either revoked or discharged, or until your restricted involuntary treatment order is discharged or expires. The RCTO sometimes states where you must live. The order may also specify any conditions that your psychiatrist or the Chief Psychiatrist considers appropriate.

Your psychiatrist or the Chief Psychiatrist may vary these conditions from time to time, and must discuss the reasons with you.

If you are unhappy with any of the conditions, you should talk to a member of the treating team or you can appeal to the Mental Health Review Board.

Revoking the restricted community treatment order

If you do not comply with your RCTO or your treatment plan, members of the treating team will try to help you to comply. However, if you still do not comply and there is a significant risk that your health will get worse because of your non-compliance, your psychiatrist or the Chief Psychiatrist may revoke the RCTO and you must return to the mental health service for treatment.

Your RCTO may also be revoked if your psychiatrist or the Chief Psychiatrist believes that your illness would be better treated in a mental health service.

If your RCTO is revoked, reasonable efforts will be made to tell you and you must then go to the mental health service.

Discharging the restricted community treatment order

If the Chief Psychiatrist believes that any of the criteria for being on a restricted involuntary treatment order no longer apply to you, you must be discharged from the RCTO and from the restricted involuntary treatment order. You can discuss continuing treatment on a voluntary basis with your case manager or psychiatrist.

If at any time you want to be discharged from the RCTO, you should talk to your psychiatrist or other members of the treating team, or you can appeal to the Mental Health Review Board. Whether or not you appeal, the board will initially review the order within eight weeks of you being placed on a restricted involuntary treatment order and then at least every 12 months if you continue on the order. The board will also review your RCTO if you have been on it for 12 months. Your psychiatrist will also regularly review you to see if you should be discharged.

This section of the booklet has information about your rights and entitlements to appeal and review by the Mental Health Review Board.

Telephone information line

You can listen to a recorded summary of information about the Mental Health Review Board in a number of languages by calling the telephone information line. Telephone numbers are listed on the back of this booklet. The lines are open 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

The functions of the board

The Mental Health Review Board is an independent tribunal that:

- hears appeals from patients on restricted involuntary treatment orders who want to be discharged from the order
- reviews all patients on restricted involuntary treatment orders within eight weeks of being placed on the order to decide if they can be discharged
- reviews all patients on restricted involuntary treatment orders at least every 12 months to decide if they can be discharged
- reviews patients who have been on a restricted community treatment order for 12 months
- hears appeals from patients who do not want to be transferred to a different mental health service.

At each appeal or review, the board will also review your treatment plan.

Your right to appeal to the board

It is your right to appeal to the Mental Health Review Board at any time. If you want to appeal, ask a member of the treating team for an appeal form, fill it in and ask the team member to send it to the board. If no appeal form is available, you can write a letter or email an appeal to the board that sets out your name, the name of the mental health service and what you want to appeal about. The board must hear your appeal without delay. If you need help to fill in the form or with anything else, you should ask a member of the treating team, a friend, a family member, a lawyer or a community visitor to help you.

Preparing for the board hearing

The board will send you a notice advising the date, time and place at which your review or appeal will be heard. Your psychiatrist and case manager will also be notified of the hearing. It is your right to attend the hearing unless the board decides that this would be bad for your health. You are encouraged to attend and present your case and you can have someone attend to offer support or speak for you, for example, an advocate, a lawyer, a private doctor, a friend or a family member. If you are unable to attend the hearing, you should tell the board as soon as possible.

Before the hearing, read the documents that will be given to the board for your hearing (see below) and think about what you are going to say to the board. You may also want to give the board written information. Your family and friends or someone you respect may wish to write letters or come to the hearing in support of your appeal or review.

If you have special needs, such as the need for an interpreter, you should discuss these with a member of the treating team or contact the board. The board will arrange an interpreter if necessary.

Organisations that may be able to help you with your appeal or review are described at the end of this booklet.

Access to documents for the hearing

You or your representative will be given the opportunity to read any documents to be given to the board for your hearing, including your clinical file and your psychiatrist's report to the board, at least 24 hours before the hearing.

However, your psychiatrist can apply to the board to prevent you from seeing a document or part of a document if it is believed that:

- seeing the document will cause serious harm to your health or the health or safety of another person
- or
- the information in a document was given in confidence or is personal information about another person.

If an application is made to prevent you seeing a document or part of a document, a member of the treating team will tell you and explain the process. The board will make the final decision about whether you see the whole document or part of the document or none of the document.

If the board decides you should not see a document or part of any document, it may allow your representative to see it instead.

The board hearing

Hearings are held either at hospitals or community mental health services. Your hearing will usually be heard by three board members: a lawyer, a psychiatrist and a community member. If the hearing is the annual review of you being on a restricted involuntary treatment order, it may be conducted by one person: a lawyer, a psychiatrist or a community member of the board.

The hearing will be informal and private, unless the board decides that it is in your best interests or the public interest for the hearing to be open. Your doctor and other members of the treating team will give information to the board. You and your representative will be able to ask questions and explain your side of the case, for example, why you believe you should not be on a restricted involuntary treatment order.

The board will primarily consider your current mental condition and will also consider your medical, psychiatric and forensic history and your social circumstances when making its decision.

If you are an inpatient and too ill to attend the hearing, the board may visit you in your ward.

The board's decision on appeal or review

The board must decide whether all the criteria for a restricted involuntary treatment order still apply to you.

If any of the criteria for a restricted involuntary treatment order do not apply to you, you will be discharged from the order. If you were on a restricted community treatment order, you will also be discharged from that order.

You can discuss continuing treatment on a voluntary basis with your case manager or psychiatrist. If you were an inpatient, you will be free to leave the mental health service; however, if both you and your psychiatrist think you would benefit from further treatment at the mental health service, you can ask to stay on a voluntary basis.

If the board decides that all the criteria for being on a restricted involuntary treatment order still apply to you, you will continue to receive treatment as an involuntary patient.

If you are an inpatient and the board considers that the treatment you need can be obtained through a restricted community treatment order (RCTO), it may order your psychiatrist to place you on a RCTO.

If you are on a RCTO, the board can vary the conditions of the order. If the board revokes your RCTO, you must return to the mental health service.

The board will also review your treatment plan to decide whether the proper procedures have been followed in making the plan. For example, were your wishes taken into account and did the psychiatrist consider alternative treatments? The board must be satisfied that the mental health service can implement the plan.

At the end of the hearing, the board will tell you its decision and the reasons for it. You will be given a written copy of the decision. If you want written reasons for the decision, you must request these in writing from the board within 28 days and the board must provide you with a statement of reasons within 14 days of your request. You can appeal again to the board at any time.

Review of the board's decision

If you disagree with the board's decision you can apply to the Victorian Civil and Administrative Tribunal (VCAT) for a review of the board's decision. VCAT is an independent tribunal with the power to confirm or overturn the decision of the board.

Applications must be made in writing within 28 days of receiving the board's decision or, if you requested a statement of reasons from the board, within 28 days of receiving that statement, to:

Victorian Civil and Administrative Tribunal
General List
55 King Street, Melbourne, 3000

Telephone: 9628 9755

Fax: 9628 9788

Organisations that may be able to help you with an application are described at the end of this booklet.

You should be treated with dignity and respect and be protected from abuse when you receive treatment and care from the mental health service. If you are unhappy about any part of your treatment or care, you can complain. A good place to start is with your case manager, primary nurse or another member of the treating team, the complaints liaison officer or consumer consultant in the hospital or the Director of Psychiatry at the mental health service.

You can also complain directly to the Health Services Commissioner on telephone 8601 5200 or the Chief Psychiatrist on 1300 767 299.

If you need help with your complaint, you can ask someone you trust to assist you. This might be a member of the treating team, a friend, a family member, a lawyer or a community visitor.
